

About the Contributors

Martha Armstrong is vice president of companion animals and equine protection for The HSUS.

Frank R. Ascione is a professor of psychology at Utah State University. His research currently focuses on developmental aspects of cruelty to animals. He is co-editor of Cruelty to Animals and Interpersonal Violence, published by Purdue University Press.

Richard Farinato is director of captive wildlife protection for The HSUS.

David Fraser is professor of animal welfare at the University of British Columbia, cross-appointed by the Faculty of Agricultural Sciences and the Centre for Applied Ethics. After studying ethology in Canada and the United Kingdom, he has pursued a career in the behavior, management, and welfare of animals. His research has ranged from designing better pig pens to reducing traffic accidents involving moose.

Alan M. Goldberg is director of the Johns Hopkins Center for Alternatives to Animal Testing and professor of toxicology in the Department of Environmental Health Sciences at the Johns Hopkins School of Public Health. He is a leading authority on the creation, development, and validation of alternative toxicological methods, and he currently serves as president of the In Vitro Specialty Section of the Society of Toxicology. He received The HSUS's first Russell and Burch Award in 1991 and the Society of Toxicology's Ambassador of Toxicology Award in 1998.

Temple Grandin is a designer of livestock-handling facilities and an assistant professor of animal science at Colorado State University. Dr. Grandin received her doctorate in animal science from the University of Illinois in 1989. She is the author of more than three hundred articles on animal handling, animal welfare, and animal facility design.

John Hadidian is the director of Urban Wildlife Programs for The HSUS and co-editor of Wild Neighbors: The Humane Approach to Living with Wildlife. Prior to joining The HSUS, he was a wildlife biologist with the National Park Service's National Capital Region.

David Hancocks is director of Victoria's Open Range Zoo in Werribee, Australia.

Harold Herzog is professor of psychology at Western Carolina University. His research includes studies of the cockfighting subculture of the Appalachian mountains, attitudes toward animal experimentation, moral dilemmas of veterinary students, and gender differences in human/animal interactions.

Christyna Hunter is editorial assistant of Animal Sheltering magazine, a publication of The HSUS.

Paul G. Irwin is president and chief executive officer of The HSUS, the nation's largest animal protection organization. An officer of The HSUS since 1976, he also serves as president of the World Society for the Protection of Animals. He is an ordained United Methodist minister and the author of Losing Paradise, published by Square One Publishers.

Leesteffy Jenkins has a private law practice specializing in international, environmental, and animal protection issues and trade and environment. She has been a legal advisor to The HSUS for nine years.

Jay F. Kirkpatrick is director of science and conservation biology and curator of animals at ZooMontana in Billings; an associate professor at the School of Veterinary Medicine, University of California, Davis; and an HSUS consultant. Since receiving his doctorate in reproductive physiology from Cornell University in 1971, Dr. Kirkpatrick has carried out research on wildlife fertility control and non-capture methods for studying reproduction in free-roaming wildlife. He is the author of Into the Wind: North America's Wild Horses and is probably best known for his contraceptive research on wild horses on Assateague Island, Maryland, for the study of reproduction in the bison of Yellowstone National Park, and for his work in African elephant contraception at Kruger National Park, Republic of South Africa.

Daniel E. Kossow has a master's degree in animals and public policy from Tufts University School of Veterinary Medicine.

Randall Lockwood is vice president for research and educational outreach of The HSUS and scientific director of Humane Society Press. He is co-editor of Cruelty to Animals and Interpersonal Violence, published by Purdue University Press.

Franklin M. Loew is president of Becker College in Worcester, Massachusetts, and former dean of the Tufts University School of Veterinary Medicine. He is the author of Vet in the Saddle: John L. Poett, First Veterinary Surgeon of the North West Mounted Police and coauthor of The Animal Research Controversy: Protest, Process and Public Policy.

Joy Mench is a professor of animal science and the director of the Center for Animal Welfare in the College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences at the University of California, Davis. She received her doctorate in ethology from the University of Sussex in 1983 and now conducts research on the behavior and welfare of farm, companion, and laboratory animals. She also teaches courses on animal welfare and the ethics of animal use.

Suzanne Millman is director of scientific programs in the Farm Animals and Sustainable Agriculture section of The HSUS. She received her doctorate in applied ethology from the Department of Animal and Poultry Science, University of Guelph, Canada, and has taught courses for veterinary and animal science students.

Andrew N. Rowan is senior vice president for research, education, and international issues at The HSUS. He is author of Of Mice, Models, and Men and coauthor of The Animal Research Controversy: Protest, Process, and Public Policy.

Allen Rutberg is senior scientist for wildlife and habitat protection for The HSUS and a clinical assistant professor at the Tufts University School of Veterinary Medicine. He received his doctorate in zoology in 1984 from the University of Washington, Seattle. Before coming to The HSUS in 1991, Dr. Rutberg held positions on the biology faculties of Vassar College and Shippensburg and Pennsylvania State Universities. At The HSUS Dr. Rutberg has overseen the wildlife immuncontraception effort as well as HSUS programs on urban deer, wild horses, and national park management.

Sydney Smith is manager of business development and corporate relations for The HSUS. She is an urban wildlife specialist working toward her master's degree in community planning at the University of Maryland.

Martin Stephens is vice president for animal research issues at The HSUS, where he directs The HSUS's work on the use of animals in research, testing, and education. He received his doctorate in biology from the University of Chicago in 1984 and joined the staff of The HSUS in 1985.

Robert Stumberg is a professor of law at Georgetown University Law Center, where he is also clinical director of the Harrison Institute for Public Law.

Susan Tomasello is administrative assistant in the Companion Animals section of The HSUS.

Bernard Unti is a doctoral candidate at American University. His dissertation focuses on the history of organized animal protection in the United States before World War II.