QUESTION: Captive hunts are fenced enclosures where mammals like white-tailed deer are stocked and shot for trophies. Unlike traditional hunting in the wild, the animals on captive hunts have no way to escape the confines of the fence.

Some feel that captive hunts are unsporting and give the shooter an unfair advantage over the animal being pursued. Do you agree or disagree?

QUESTION: Puppy mills are large-scale dog breeding operations that places profit over the health and safety of the dogs. The breeding dogs spend their entire lives in tiny, wire cages and forced to breed continuously to produce dogs for pet stores to sell. They are often sick and malnourished, which leads to many health and genetic problems in their puppies.

Some feel that a pet store that sells a puppy mill dog should be responsible for vet bills incurred by a person who unknowingly buys a dog with health or genetic problems from the store. Do you agree or disagree?
