Teaching kindness to animals and respect for natural habitats while helping to instill good reading habits in children

KIND TIME

IN SPRING, MANY wild animals give birth and try to raise their young in a safe environment. But as we develop more and more land, building homes, businesses and the infrastructure to support them, we encroach on their natural habitats. Conflicts with wildlife occur, but it's important for children to know that there are ways to peacefully coexist with our wild neighbors. From sharing a beach with harbor seals to being courteous to wild critters near our homes, this issue encourages kids to respect the wildlife around them.

EARTH DAY AND ARBOR DAY are both celebrated in April. Put your children out on a limb by posing this question: What good is a tree? Challenge them to name ways in which trees contribute to the lives of all animals. Examples include: Trees help keep our air clean, provide shade, keep land from eroding, provide wood for homes, furniture, paper and other products, as well as food and nesting places for animals. Can your children think of ways we can protect the trees in our environment? Consider planting a tree seedling as part of a family celebration of the Earth, animals and the environment.

BOOK NOOK

In Finding Home

by Sandra Markle, illustrated by Alan Marks, a koala and her baby are forced to flee a devastating forest fire, leaving their familiar habitat and home behind. As their search for food brings them closer and closer to people, the koalas are faced with new and potentially dangerous situations. Just when it looks like they will never find a suitable home, they find it in the most unlikely of places. The evocative text and watercolor paintings offer subtle lessons in the natural history of koalas and their native Australia, while also demonstrating that peaceful coexistence between humans and their wild neighbors is not only possible—it can be positive for all involved.

Critter Clues FROM PAGE 7

Our mystery critter is a dolphin. Dolphins are mammals, not fish. Like all mammals, they are warm-blooded and give birth to live young who feed on their mother's milk. Dolphins are social animals who live in large groups (called pods), often remaining in close family groups throughout their lives. They can dive deep in the ocean, but must surface to breathe air through a blowhole on top of the head. If a member of the pod is injured or sick, others will nudge the animal to the surface for air. Sadly, keeping dolphins in captivity for entertainment removes them from their families and prevents them from enjoying many of their natural behaviors.

Kind Quiz FROM PAGE 8

- There are not enough homes for all of the cats and dogs born every day in this country. Spaying and neutering operations keep pets from adding to the problem of too many homeless pets.
- Answers will vary.
- 3 Like most moms, wild animal moms want to raise their babies in a safe, warm place.
- 4 Marine Mammal Protection Act
- 5 Babies may be left behind and the animals may face danger from predators and be unable to find food.
- Answers will vary.

Online Worksheet

- A raccoon family has moved into their cabin, disrupting their planned peaceful weekend.
- 2 The raccoon found a nice, safe place to raise her babies and the arrival of the humans may cause her to relocate.
- There didn't appear to be anyone living in the cabin and the chimney was safe from the weather and predators.
- Answers will vary.
- Captions will vary.

Haiku! How About You? Childrens' haiku will vary.

After writing their own haiku, your children might enjoy taking a look at Dogku by Andrew Clements. This fun story of a stray dog who shows up on a family's back step is told entirely in haiku!
